International Urban Wildlife Conference

Portland, Oregon

June 2019

Portland State University will be hosting the International Urban Wildlife Conference to be held June 2-5, 2019 in Portland, Oregon on the grounds of the Portland State University Campus.

About the International Urban Wildlife Conference

More than in any other setting, humans interact with wildlife in the world's rapidly expanding urban environments. This reality necessitates that we increase our understanding of urban growth on wildlife populations and develop sustainable solutions to manage conflict for the benefit of both humans and animals. The International Urban Wildlife Conference will focus on disseminating the latest research and information on the ecology and management of urban wildlife, reducing human-wildlife conflict, planning wildlife-friendly cities, and strategies for effective outreach and education. Conference proceedings will include contributions from leading researchers, practitioners, and students from the United States and around the world.

Conference facts:

- Over 400 attendees expected, from across the United States and the world
- Attendees will include researchers, planners, and practitioners from state and federal agencies, universities, municipal and county governments, architects, urban planners, and private organizations
- Attendance at this conference has grown rapidly since the inaugural conference in 2006, reflecting both interest and relevance of wildlife in urban areas

Sponsor Benefits

The International Urban Wildlife Conference offers your organization the unique opportunity to partner with Urban Wildlife professionals in the United States and internationally by protecting wildlife resources in urban setting for future generations. Your sponsorship will support the training and exchange of ideas for urban wildlife management, research techniques, and education programs, and will support Portland, Oregon as a leader in urban wildlife research!
